Positive Discipline in the Classroom for Beginning Teachers

Feeling challenged by unmotivated students, power struggles, recess problems being dragged into the classroom, no time to teach because you're constantly dealing with behaviors?

Positive Discipline in the Classroom offers respectful solutions that work long term.

Create a classroom/school environment where students feel encouraged and engaged in learning, solve their own friendship issues, and feel a sense of connection, value and challenge. As an educator you will feel a sense of accomplishment and find your "calm" once more.

Participants will learn "the basics" of Positive Discipline and will acquire many tools with which to implement this approach. The course is taught experientially so that there is time to practice new tools.

Building Resilience

No community is immune from the impact of toxic stress. Many students have been exposed to trauma and, as a result, have difficulties in school. How can you become a buffering adult who helps children deal with toxic stress and build resilience?

This course will explore:

- The brain science around what trauma, toxic stress and insecure attachment do to growing brains.
- How to lead a classroom to benefit all students – including those exposed to trauma.
- How to teach youth why their brain sometimes “won’t cooperate” and how they can learn to self-regulate.
- How to use strengths-based plans to foster learning for all youth exposed to trauma.
- How all of us can be a buffer against toxic stress for the youth in our communities.
- Learn several tools for setting clear and respectful limits while maintaining connections with youth.
- Practice the process of making effective agreements with youth.
- Learn how to understand the belief behind the behavior so that interventions can be more effective.
- Develop solutions for responding to specific “challenging” student.

We will learn ways to practice mindfulness and reflection in order to reduce toxic stress and practice self-care in your workplace and throughout your life.
